The situation that I'm trying to describe is the decline in the usefulness of a social trait, rather than the rise of a social trait. A well-known example of such a social trait is wearing a tie. It has evolved from a social trait, where everyone in the culture was expected to wear a tie at work, into a taboo, where a new generation of people feel ashamed to wear a tie because they've been influenced by the younger people in the office who don't wear ties. Here is an example of a trait that is now more of a taboo than a social one: It's been common to refer to the fact that it's not good to be boring. A: How about "unfashionable". From wiktionary: not fashionable; not in style; not fashionable in society EDIT: There's also something to be said about "unpopular", which might apply in your case. EDIT 2: The suggestion from the comments was "outmoded", which also fits. “Every now and then something positive comes out of all this madness. Today I’ve got a rare interview with another positive role model
